professional football are dealing frequently with the question if competitive balance is decreasing in the european major leagues clubs like the fc barcelona or fc bayern m nchen were dominating on a national and european level in recent years in professional sports a positive helix between financial and sporting power exists sporting success implies financial success which can be reinvested in the sporting strength hence leads to even more competitive power the key driver for the underlying financial success consists of the revenues generated by selling the clubs media rights two different systems of selling these rights exist a decentralized and a centralized one the aim of this paper is to investigate if the selling system of the media rights has influence on the competitive balance in the league many different tools to measure competitive balance in team sports exist for the underlying analysis the ratio of standard deviation the concentration ratio 2 and the concentration ratio 5 have been applied the final rankings of the recent 30 seasons from 1984 to 2013 of six european football leagues have been investigated the english spanish german italian french and portuguese league the data for the analysis was disposable on the world wide the leagues were analyzed with each measurement tool the results were presented and evaluated in different steps in the first step the results of each league were calculated for each measurement tool for the entire investigation period in the second step the results were sorted and subsequently summarized to one final ranking of competitive balance by means of this final ranking and the individual analysis results of the leagues the author tried to cluster and evaluate these findings referred to the media rights selling system out of the analysis it can be stated that leagues with an individual tv rights selling system show a lower level of competitive balance by trend this statement can be emphasized by the created five hypotheses which all point in the direction that collective selling of the tv rights increases competitive balance two out of these five hypotheses can be confirmed to a large extent out of the investigation and one can be confirmed from a theoretical point of view the lasting two hypotheses can neither be confirmed completely out of the investigation results nor rejected master s thesis from the year 2012 in the subject law comparative legal systems comparative law grade a golden gate university course sports law language english abstract there is no question that the most popular sport in the world in terms of participation viewership and business is soccer although soccer gets more popular today in the united states us the immense influence of the major sports football nfl baseball mba basketball nba and hockey nhl makes it almost impossible for soccer to compete in the us the soccer industry generates revenues running into the tens of billions per year the top 20 clubs alone generated around 4 4 billion euro 5 37 billion in the 2010 11 season despite increasingly high volumes of revenue some european soccer clubs are in large amounts of debt for example manchester united the most valuable soccer club in the world at 1 86 billion has debts of 756 million as a result of the 2005 takeover by american businessman malcolm glazer to regulate the financial problems the union of european football association uefa invented the financial fair play rules which basically require that a team does not spend more than it earns besides the lack of financial stability there is also a competitive and financial imbalance between the clubs the major us leagues created devices to prevent competitive and financial imbalance by restricting players player agents and the clubs through salary caps revenue sharing or a luxury tax this thesis will analyze if the devices are successful and if they would work in germany and europe as well after an overview of the different structures of the leagues it will be examined if there is competitive and financial balance in the leagues and after an overview of the devices if the introduction of the devices really creates financial and competitive balance it will also be reviewed if the rules are legally justified with a particular test of the financial fair play rules at the end it will be discussed how the devices can be enhanced
