golden lion tamarins are found only in brazilian forests these small remarkable monkeys once had plenty of space to roam and claim family territories but years of deforestation caused their numbers to shrink they were in serious danger of becoming extinct to help scientists studied the animals in zoo settings but they faced several mysteries why weren t golden lion tamarins reproducing in zoos if scientists reintroduced zoo raised tamarins to the wild would those monkeys survive and how could scientists give tamarins enough forest area for the population to grow find out how scientists and concerned citizens worked together to give golden lion tamarins a hopeful future without the extraordinary efforts of the editors and authors of this book three of the four lion tamarin species golden golden headed black faced and black would most likely be extinct the contributors hard work set international standards and became the model for the preservation of other endangered species there is of course still much to be done and this comprehensive assessment of research findings and conservation efforts leads the way the first section of the book covers the history and framework of research and conservation for the four species stressing the importance of both group and individual efforts part ii examines the principal research fields that have played an important role in contributing to the management of the species in captivity and the wild the authors maintain that there is no substitute for long term data and good science when developing recovery and conservation programs part iii focuses on direct interventions to conserve wild populations and their habitats as guided by scientific and educational principles kleiman and rylands close the book by noting the remarkable accomplishments of lion tamarin conservation and look hopefully toward future directions and challenges this is a detailed assessment of the state of biodiversity in the atlantic forest separate sections examine each of the three countries that are home to the forest beginning with a brief overview that explores the dynamics of biodiversity loss in that country and outlining the topics to be addressed
