this work takes seriously the compositional nature of isaiah 24 27 and moves beyond the schema established by bernard duhm who defined these chapters as a composite of unrelated pericopae this new approach has enabled new light to be brought to such perennial problems as the identity of the city or cities the date of the composition the structure of the four chapters the perspective of the composition and the nature of the resurrection alluded to in 26 19 this study concludes that isaiah

24 27 was written during the exile a time significantly earlier than is commonly held by critical scholars the composition exhibits the marks of a coherent and integrated work it is not apocalyptic in the sense of envisioning the termination of the present age nor is there any notion of an individual resurrection such as one finds in the book of daniel
