since the earliest days of warfare military operations have followed a predictable formula after a decisive battle an army must pursue the enemy and destroy its organization in order to achieve a victorious campaign but by the mid 19th century the emergence of massive armies and advanced weaponry and the concomitant decline in the effectiveness of cavalry had diminished the practicality of pursuit producing campaigns that bogged down short of decisive victory great battles had become curiously indecisive decisive campaigns virtually impossible beginning with the birth of the republican party in the north richard abbott surveys party attitudes toward the south summarizes republican efforts to expand into the border states during the civil war and examines in detail the steps taken after the war to organize the party in the southern states
